Event Profile

Germany's largest veterinary conference takes place for the ninth time in Leipzig in 2018, in parallel to the vetexpo trade fair. It covers all areas and professional groups in veterinary practice, including practising veterinary surgeons, veterinary practitioners in science and industry and those working in public veterinary services. Many of the main programme items are devoted to individual species, including dogs, cats and other domestic pets, horses, ruminants, pigs and poultry. But it is also a tradition of the congress to cover overarching issues such as, for example, food safety, animal protection and the prevention and containment of animal diseases. In addition to the national congress, the International Conference on Equine Reproductive Medicine (ICERM) will, once again, be one of the cornerstones of the event. Specialists from all over the world will meet up to discuss the latest findings in equine reproductive medicine. The language of the ICERM congress is English. The Leipzig Veterinary Congress, Germany's number 1 professional development event in its field, is held every two years and organised by the Faculty of Veterinary Medicine at the University of Leipzig, the chambers of veterinary medicine in the German federal states of Berlin, Brandenburg, Mecklenburg-Western Pomerania, Saxony, Saxony-Anhalt and Thuringia, together with the Leipzig Trade Fair and Exhibition Centre.
